RUSSELL'S FARM SUPPLY MOURNS LOSS AND BELOVED PARROT AFTER FIRE, COMMUNITY SUPPORTS 75-YEAR-OLD BUSINESS

Staff Report

COLLIERVILLE, Tenn. — A fire damaged Russell's Farm Supply last Thursday evening. Popeye, the store's longtime parrot and a familiar presence to generations of customers, died in the fire.

Collierville Fire & Rescue A-Shift crews responded to the reported structure fire at approximately 9:30 p.m. on Thursday, at 136 S. Center St., according to the department.

Engine 81 arrived within three minutes and encountered heavy fire conditions, with flames coming through the roof. The main body of the fire was concentrated in the center of the building.

Firefighters quickly worked to contain the blaze, bringing it under control about 10 minutes after the first crew arrived. Crews remained at the scene to extinguish hot spots and complete overhaul operations. No injuries were reported.

The cause and origin remain under investigation by the Collierville Fire Marshal's Office.

The Collierville Fire Departmetn department thanked the Collierville Police Department's officers and dispatchers for their assistance, and the Germantown Fire Department for sending crews to help, in a post on Facebook.

For the family behind Russell's, the fire represents a painful setback for a business woven into the fabric of the Collierville community for three-quarters of a century.

In a message to customers and supporters on Facebook, the owners reflected on the store's history and their hopes for its future.

"For 75 years, Russell's has been a part of the Collierville community," the family wrote. "When we took over last November, our dream was to preserve its history while building a future for generations to come."

The owners said their first year has brought more challenges than they anticipated but expressed faith that the business' story is not over.

"We may not understand His plan right now, but we trust that He is not finished with our story," they wrote.

Despite the damage, the family said its fall festival and concert, scheduled for Saturday, would go on, provided the grounds are deemed safe.

With the event less than 48 hours away when the family shared its announcement, the owners said they were determined to continue with plans that had taken considerable community effort to organize.

COLLIERVILLE SCHEDULES MULBERRY STREET PARKING LOT REPAIRS

COLLIERVILLE, Tenn. — Public Works crews will repair parking lots along East Mulberry Street on the Town Square from Monday, Nov. 2, through Friday, Nov. 6, according to the Town of Collierville.

East Mulberry Street will remain open to traffic during construction, but parking will be limited in the affected area. The town will provide updates if a temporary road closure becomes necessary or work extends beyond the scheduled completion date.

Motorists are encouraged to use caution when traveling through the work zone.

COLLIERVILLE, Tenn. — Mike Hoysler, known affectionately as "Uncle Mike" to members of the Collierville Fire Department, has never needed a uniform to be a part of the department's family. Instead, it has grown from the care he has shown firefighters and their families.

For years, Hoysler has supported firefighters in ways that often happen quietly, away from public recognition. He has spent countless hours cooking for crews, sharing stories around the firehouse table, listening when someone needs to talk and finding small ways to brighten someone's day.

Known affectionately among the firefighters as the department's "battalion chef," Hoysler has become a familiar presence through his food, humor, friendship and signature "vitamin G."

But firefighters say his impact extends far beyond the kitchen.

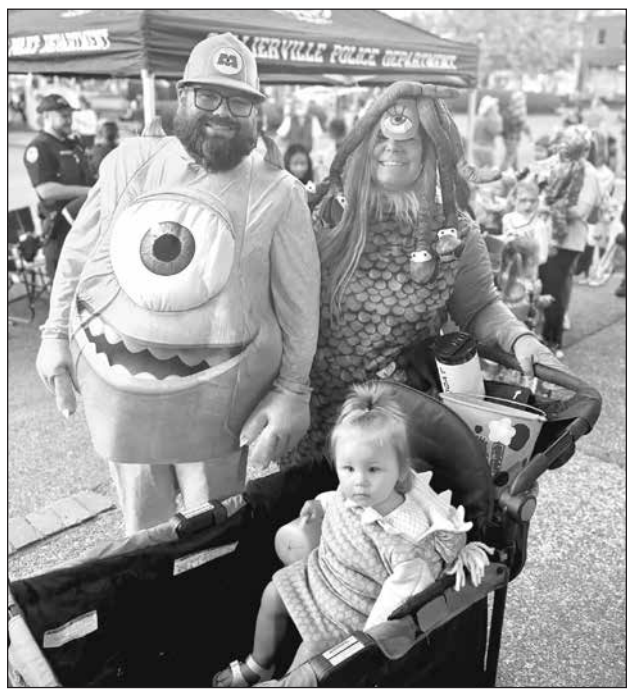

Hoysler has built relationships with members of the department by making people feel welcome and cared for, offering companionship during long shifts and support during difficult times. His generosity has helped make the firehouse feel more like home.

Now, as Hoysler faces cancer for a second time, members of the department are turning their attention toward someone who has spent years looking after them.

In a message recognizing Hoysler, Collierville firefighters expressed gratitude for the meals, conversations, laughter and acts of kindness he has shared over the years, stating, "Mike, we hope you know just how loved and appreciated you are. You've made a difference in more lives than you probably realize, and we are pretty lucky to call you family."

FIRE,

"So many wonderful people have poured their hearts into making this event possible, and now, more than ever, we need the love and fellowship of the community that has supported Russell's for generations," the family wrote.

The owners emphasized that the business has always represented more than its physical building, pointing to the memories, traditions and relationships that have kept customers returning for 75 years.

"Russell's has always been more than four walls," the family wrote. "It's the memories, traditions, and people who have made this place so special for 75 years. The building may be gone, but the heart of Russell's remains."

The family invited the community to gather Saturday in a show of support, faith and fellowship as it begins navigating the aftermath of the fire.

For a business whose history is closely tied to the people it serves, the owners' message underscored their determination to preserve Russell's legacy even as they face an uncertain path forward.

HOYSLER,

For the men and women of the Collierville Fire Department, Hoysler's story is a reminder that service takes many forms. Sometimes, it looks like a firefighter responding to an emergency. Other times, it looks like a home-cooked meal, a listening ear or a familiar face waiting at the table.

For years, Uncle Mike has provided those moments of comfort and connection. Now, the firefighters he has come to regard as family want him to know he does not have to face this chapter alone.

A FEW TENNESSEE CHILLS

Ad Veritas

Daniel Richardson

With Halloween approaching, I thought this might be a good week to explore some of the stranger corners of Tennessee history. There is something more interesting about a spooky story when it involves a place you could actually drive to, rather than a fictional castle somewhere across the ocean.

Of course, there is a difference between a story that has been told for generations and something that has been established as fact. As a newspaper publisher, I ought to respect that distinction—even when a good ghost story is involved.

Take the Bell Witch, probably Tennessee's most famous contribution to the subject. The legend centers on the Bell family near present-day Adams in Robertson County. Around 1817, according to the traditional account, strange disturbances began at their home. The stories describe unexplained noises, bedcovers being pulled away and an unseen presence that eventually began speaking to the family.

Apparently, this was not a ghost content to creak a floorboard and leave everyone wondering. In the telling, it argued, imitated voices, and tormented members of the household. John Bell died in December 1820, and the legend attributed his death to the mysterious visitor. His death belongs to history; the supernatural explanation belongs to the story.

One detail I found especially interesting involved a fellow newspaper man. In 1937, Tennessean columnist T. H. Alexander helped revive the legend by publicizing a prediction that the witch would return that year. According to the Tennessee Historical Society, Alexander was himself a skeptic who enjoyed a good ghost story. Nevertheless, his writing helped stir up fresh fears and reports of strange happenings. The year ended without proof of a supernatural return.

That may be a useful reminder for those of us who work with words: a story can take on a life of its own, even when its subject apparently cannot.

For something eerie that requires considerably less imagination, consider our state Capitol.

William Strickland, the architect who designed the building, died in 1854 before construction was finished. He was buried in the Capitol's north wall. Samuel Morgan, who helped oversee the building's construction, was also eventually entombed in the building. These are not merely portraits of distinguished men hanging on the walls. Their remains are actually inside them.

Ghost stories have grown around those permanent occupants, including tales of voices arguing when nobody appears to be there. Those are stories, not established evidence of a haunting. But the burials themselves are real, which seems like plenty of material for an uncomfortable conversation if you happen to be the last person leaving the building at night.

Then there is Carnton in Franklin, where the unsettling part of the story needs no supernatural explanation at all.

During the Battle of Franklin on Nov. 30, 1864, the home became a field hospital for hundreds of wounded Confederate soldiers. The following morning, the bodies of four Confederate generals lay on its back porch. According to the Battle of Franklin Trust, the floors of the restored house still bear bloodstains from the men treated there.

That is a different kind of haunting. It is not a tale about something someone might have heard in the dark, but a physical reminder of suffering that happened in an ordinary home. The McGavock family later provided land beside their family cemetery for the burial of nearly 1,500 Confederate soldiers killed in the battle.

I think that is part of what makes these places so compelling. Beneath the legends are real families, real buildings and lives that were much more complicated than a paragraph on a historical marker can explain. Sometimes a spooky story gets our attention long enough for us to learn the history underneath it.

There is room to enjoy the storytelling without accepting every detail, and room to appreciate the history without turning someone's tragedy into entertainment.

So enjoy Halloween and a good Tennessee tale or two. Just remember which parts are documented and which parts became more interesting with each retelling.

LESSONS FROM THE COACHING CHAIR:

THE NEXT STEP IS ENOUGH

I would like God to give me a little more detail.

A clear plan would be nice. Show me how things will work out, how long the hard part will last, and what I need to do along the way. Then I could relax and get moving.

Maybe you have asked for something like that, too.

We want to know that our children will be all right. We want to know how we will care for an aging parent. We want to know whether a job change makes sense or whether the money will stretch far enough.

Those are real concerns. When people depend on us, looking ahead is part of loving them well.

The trouble comes when we insist on knowing the outcome before we are willing to take a step.

Proverbs 3:5–6 tells us to trust the Lord with all our heart rather than lean on our own understanding. It calls us to acknowledge Him in all our ways and trust Him to direct our paths.

I notice that the passage does not promise a full explanation.

That is the part I find difficult. I can pray about a concern in the morning and spend the afternoon trying to work out every possible ending. Somewhere along the way, thinking turns into worrying, and worrying starts to feel like work.

But after all that effort, I am often no closer to an answer. I am just tired.

In financial coaching, a whole pile of concerns can make it hard to begin. There may be bills to sort, decisions to make, and habits that need to change. Trying to solve everything at once can leave a person stuck.

A useful question is, "What can you do next?"

Open the bill. Write down the balance. Have the conversation you have been putting off. Ask for help.

The same question can help in other parts of life.

You may not know what your parent will need six months from now, but you can make a call today. You may not know where your career is headed, but you can update your résumé. You may not know how to repair a strained relationship, but you can listen without preparing your defense.

Each step gives us a way to act on what we know while trusting God with what we do not.

This week, name one concern that keeps circling in your mind. Bring it to God honestly. Then ask, "What is one faithful thing I can do about this today?"

Choose something small enough to do, and do it.

As we move toward Thanksgiving, that is where I want to begin: learning to trust God in the middle of an unfinished story.

Along the way, we may begin to notice the help we have already received—a willing friend, a little courage, enough strength for today.

Those are gifts we can give thanks for, even before we know how everything turns out.
